Students plan a Cheers'ful evening

By MIKE BRADSHAW
Universe Staff Writer

After 11 years of barroom comedy, "Cheers," the longest-running sitcom on TV, ends with a two-hour special tonight on channel 2 at 8 p.m. "Cheers" fans will get their fill Tuesday night with an 22-minute retrospective, "Last Call! A Cheers' Farewell," which will kick off the evening with talk show host sportscaster Bob Costas. The special will include highlights from the comedy, interviews with the show's producers, and a special end-of-the-series look at the final episode of the last series' episode. At 8:22 p.m., the final episode of "Cheers," which will feature Shelley Long, who once played Diane Chambers, will be a special guest appearance. A random survey conducted by the Universe, 60 percent of those surveyed plan to watch the series' farewell. Of that 60 percent, 73 percent believe Diane Chambers (Shelley Long) is returning to the show to marry Sam Malone, the infamous bachelor.

The end has arrived; Boston cheers its pub

Associated Press

BOSTON — For 11 years, one of the first questions visitors to Boston have asked is "Where's Vera?"

The bar that inspired "Cheers" is still in place now, cleared of much of the local ambience that in 1982 inspired the hit TV show and its cast of lovable barflies.

It's gone are the days when you knew your name at the bar. The long lines outside the pub aren't likely to vanish after today's final episode of "Cheers."

It may be, but bar owner Thomas Kershaw, and the city have reason to celebrate. The pub is near the historic Old State House, a souvenir-selling business that has spun off a multimillion-dollar industry.

& Finch Enterprises has sold more than 175,000 "Cheers" hats, 100 sweatshirts, 675,000 items of merchandise and 2 million T-shirts, Kershaw said.

While the bar has a souvenir stand upstairs, there also are celebrations around the city, notably at the Quincy Hall and Logan International Airport.

The city's farewell to the NBC series includes numerous private public receptions for the cast, including a "huge bash" at Quincy Hall today.

Many of the main characters are expected to attend, with the exception of Kirstie Alley, who's filming "The Untouchables," and possibly Woody Boyd.

Producers have been set up outside on Beacon Street and at Boston Common for viewing the final two-hour show, which opens with a 22-minute retrospective. Later, "The Tonight Show" with Massachusetts native Jay Leno, will be broadcast live from the pub.

Among events elsewhere, the SkyDome, home of the Toronto Blue Jays, is expecting about 10,000 people to turn up to watch the final episode on the stadium's giant scoreboard screen.

While much of the decor of the pub is the same, pull up a seat up at the bar, and you won't see Norm or Cliff. But there are a few regulars from the old crowd of professionals, neighbors and college students who once regarded the Bull & Finch as their haunt.

There's Tony Swain, a frequent visitor over 20 years who can be heard to complain about all the tourists, especially when he must wait to get a seat.

In place of Sam Malone is bartender Eddie Doyle, who's worked at the pub for 18 years. Some say he was the inspiration for the "Coach" character, played by Nicholas Colasanto until his death in 1985.

In the early days of the show, "suddenly people came in and took ash trays and glasses as souvenirs," Kershaw said. "We even lost a few bricks from the wall."

Doyle admits there will be a void after the final episode, but he has little doubt that tourists will continue to visit the bar.

"There's only one 'Cheers,' and it's in Boston," Doyle said as he poured a beer.

BYU team studies DNA in mummies

By PATRICK D. POYFAIR
Universe Staff Writer

Members of a BYU expedition to Egypt began the long task of processing the data they retrieved from royal mummies housed in the Cairo museum.

The team members returned in March with DNA samples from several royal mummies, including three of the pharaohs of the 18th Dynasty. BYU has access to more than 150 DNA samples of the royal mummies, but does not have all of the samples in its possession.

Members of the expedition, headed by Wilfred Griggs, professor of Ancient Scripture, were asked by the Egyptian government to study the DNA of the mummies. Years of cooperation and successful interactions resulted in the wish for BYU to again work with the Egyptian government.

"There is no other place that has as many samples of the same kind of things than we do," said Scott Woodward, a member of the expedition and an associate professor of Microbiology, "Our success has been as good or better than any place in the world."

BYU has received national attention for its previous work with ancient DNA and hopes to be able to trace the genealogy of the royal family to see if it is consistent with what was written by the government at the time the mummies died, more than 2,000 years ago.

The members of the expedition will also look to discover any incestuous relationships that took place within the royal marriages, and diseases that might have been prevalent in the families because of this practice.

BYU's on-site team consisted of a pathologist, a molecular biologist, an archaeologist and a textile expert. The same team returned from an 1990 expedition to the Fag el Gamous cemetery with approxi-

New Y buildings quake-proof

By JASON R. JOLLEY

Californians shouldn't be the only people waiting for "The Big One" to strike.

The potential for a catastrophic earthquake at BYU along the 180-mile long Wasatch Fault is a reality, said Bob Carey, an earthquake expert from the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

"The likelihood of a major earthquake here is about one-in-five over the next 50 years," Carey said. "But we must remember earthquakes can occur at any time."

Richard Nelson, a structural engineer for the BYU Planning Department, said new campus buildings are built to meet seismic resistance requirements set by the International Conference of Building Officials in the Uniform Building Code.

"Our modern buildings are built to a very stringent seismic standard," he said.

"They should be absolutely safe in an earthquake."

Nelson said older campus buildings may not be as safe as modern ones because building codes did not include seismic guidelines until the early 1960s.

"Buildings built before the '60s would not be as sound, but they were always built according to the codes of their day," he said.

The condition of all campus structures is evaluated on a regular basis, and older buildings are reinforced to meet current seismic resistance specifications when they are remodeled, Nelson said.

Nelson said construction at Helaman Halls includes an upgrade in seismic resistance.

Stephanie Potz, assistant emergency preparedness coordinator for the University Police, said the Disaster Task Force, consisting of BYU administrators and representatives from 17 departments, is responsible for dealing with the el Gamous cemetery with approximately 350 samples of DNA from "common people."

"It will be about another year before we have all of the DNA cloned and recorded," Woodward said.

The process of taking one sample all the way through the proper DNA sequence requires two to three weeks, providing no mistakes are made in the delicate procedure.

"We don't have all the pieces right now," Woodward said.

"We only have samples of a few of the royal mummies."

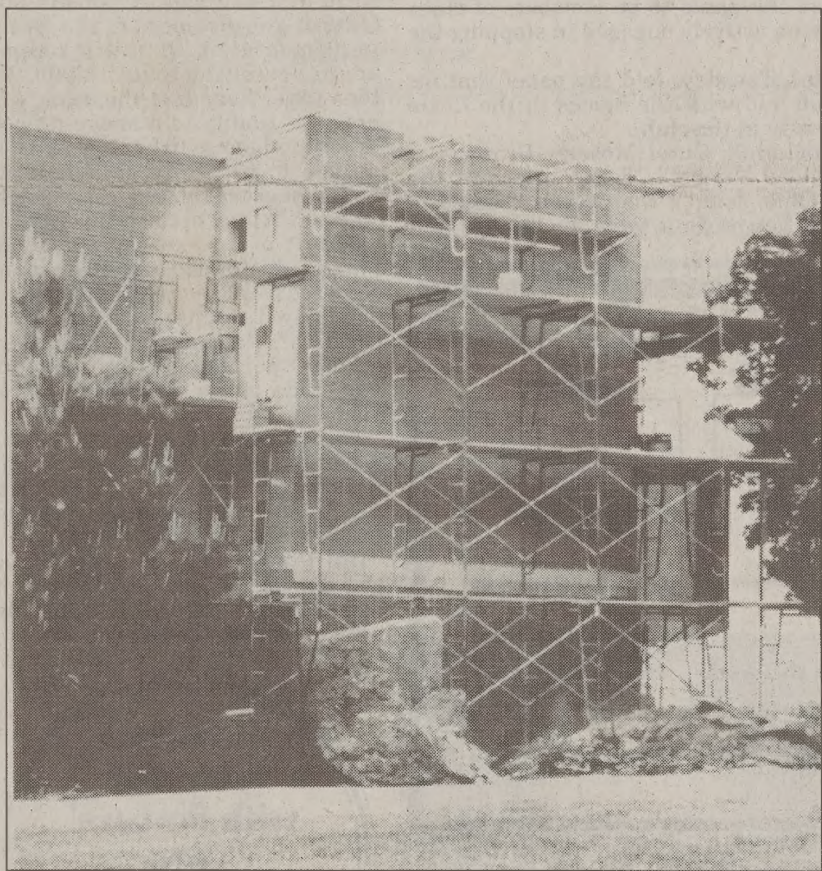

Although the process of sequencing, cloning and amplifying DNA is very time-consuming, Woodward said he feels his efforts are going as planned. More than 20 sequences have already been made and decoded.

He said he feels that it won't be long before team will determine which mummies are related.

As a result of the trip, the scientists hope to compare the DNA of the royal mummies with that of the mummies buried in the Fag el Gamous cemetery.

Woodward said he has already discovered, by reading the gene sequences of the mummies who were buried together, that the mummies in the Fag el Gamous cemetery were common people who did not engage in incestuous relationships. Woodward also found that mummies unearthed in the cemetery were buried as family units.

aftermath of a major disaster.

"BYU has an emergency plan that covers everything from floods to fires to earthquakes," she said.

"Compared to other entities its size, BYU is probably better prepared to deal with an emergency."

Potz said a rapid return to the regular class schedule would be an important goal of the Disaster Task Force in the event of an earthquake.

Fred May of the Utah Division of Comprehensive Emergency Management (CEM) said major earthquakes occur at 300 to 400-year intervals on random points along the fault, striking the same segment roughly every 2,500 years.

"We're probably in the right decade or two for the next big one," said May.

The last major quake to hit Provo occurred nearly 3,000 years ago.

"The next logical segment to go would be Provo," he said.

May said the possibility of strong movement along the Provo segment of the fault is especially likely in the near future because the last major quake to hit the area occurred so long ago.

Fake quake to shake Salt Lake

Federal agency to simulate earthquake on Wasatch Front

By JASON R. JOLLEY
Universe Staff Writer

An earthquake measuring 7.5 on the Richter scale will rock Salt Lake City and surrounding communities June 7, but residents should not panic.

It's only a test.

From June 7 through 11, the Wasatch Front will be the site of the largest simulated earthquake ever administered by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, said Lance Peterson of FEMA's Salt Lake office.

The simulation, Response '93, will be a "full-scale, statewide exercise designed to test the federal catastrophe response plan," Peterson said.

Peterson said 300 national representatives of FEMA will be in Utah to oversee the response capabilities of various state, county and city agencies and organizations.

"FEMA national is really looking at this exercise to see how it can improve the Federal Response Plan," he said.

"Utah was chosen because it exhibits the highest risk in the region for a catastrophic earthquake," said Bob Carey, a FEMA earthquake expert.

Although the public will not participate directly in the simulation, Peterson said he hopes the event will raise emergency-preparedness awareness.

"We know that in a catastrophic earthquake, government will not be able to help everyone," he said. "Individual family preparedness is our battle cry."

BYU's emergency preparedness plan will also be tested during Response '93, said Stephanie Potz, assistant emergency preparedness coordinator for the University Police.

"BYU will set up an emergency operations center at the northwest corner of the stadium," she said.

"We'll be checking out plans to handle whatever FEMA comes up with."

"We always have room for improvement, and Response '93 will show us what our weaknesses are," Potz said.

"This will be a really great training exercise for us."

New Russia will have an impact

By LAURA VERNON
Universe Staff Writer

A new BYU political science professor will discuss Russia's current and future situations during a Forum Assembly Tuesday at 11 a.m. in the de Jong Concert Hall.

Bruce D. Porter, former research associate at Harvard University who will begin teaching at BYU this fall, is scheduled to speak about Russia's struggle for democracy, the main factions seeking power in Russia and how the future of Russia will affect the lives of Americans.

Porter said that despite the disintegration of the Soviet Union into 15 independent states, the catastrophic decline of Russia's national economy and the fact that the constitution has been amended 300 times, the Russian people are freer today than they have been in more than 75 years.

"Because Russia's future will impact in myriad ways on the future of Europe, Asia and the United States, the drama unfolding there is of the highest interest to the world at large," Porter said.

New dean chosen for Fine Arts

By NANCY MERRICK
Universe Staff Writer

A new dean of the College of Fine Arts and Communications has been chosen, since the previous dean, James Mason, will become the first director of the BYU Museum of Art.

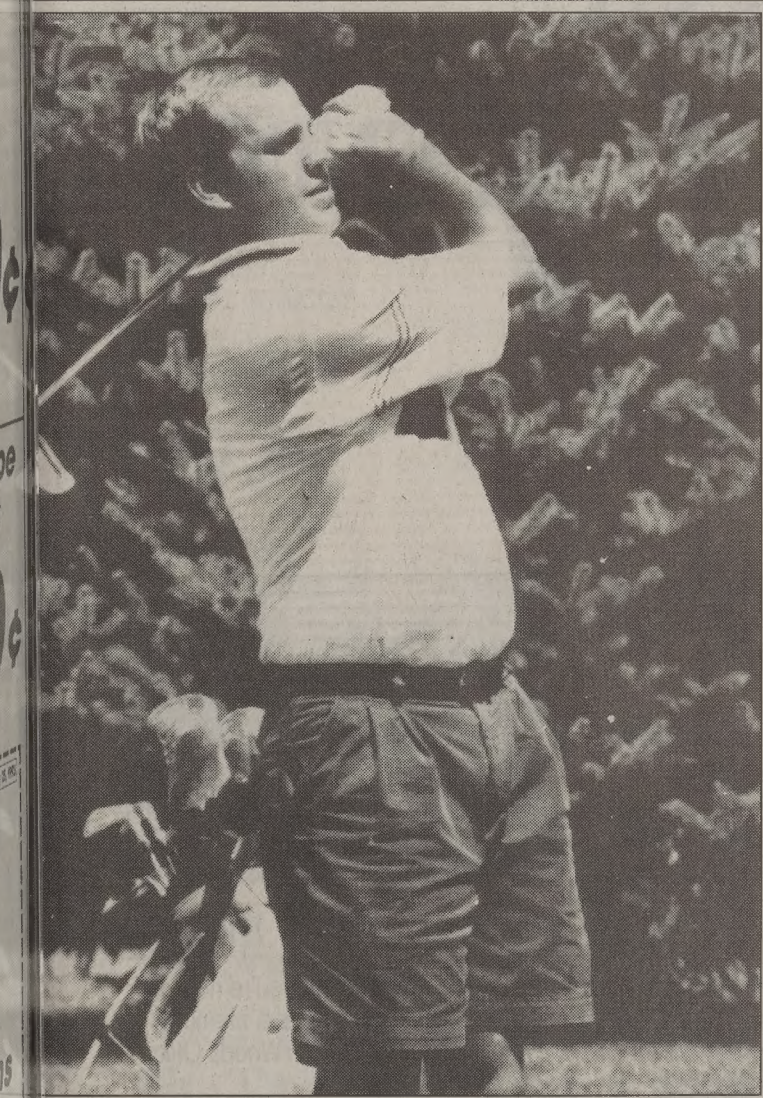

The new dean, Bruce L. Christensen, has served for the past nine years as president and CEO of the Public Broadcasting Service.

Earlier in his career, Christensen worked for BYU as the general manager of KBYU, assistant to director of University Relations and as a communications instructor.

"We're pleased that Bruce is the new dean and know he'll do an excellent job," Mason said.

Mason said he is excited about working in the museum after conceiving the idea 13 years ago and working to solicit donations to make its upcoming completion possible.

"I'm excited to be able to follow through as director of the new art museum which we've worked so hard to build," Mason said.

Clinton urging GOP to pass budget

WASHINGTON — President Clinton and Democratic congressional leaders rallied lawmakers behind the administration's budget-cutting bill Wednesday and pressured conservatives to abandon their effort to derail it.

"I think that the program is picking up steam again because the American people are recognizing that we've got to get the deficit down," Clinton told reporters during a journey to the Capitol to sell his package to nervous Democrats. "That's what brings low interest rates, that's what brings economic recovery."

In a private meeting with House Democrats, Clinton told conservatives that he opposed their effort to amend the measure by clamping spending caps on Social Security, Medicare and other government-benefit programs. Such an effort should wait for his forthcoming legislation reworking the country's health-care system, he said.

After the same meeting, Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., indicated he would not let the House consider the benefit caps when it votes next Thursday on the package. Over five years, the measure would raise taxes on the rich, energy users and others by $246 billion, and reduce spending by about $100 billion more.

Anti-gay movement may gain strength

PORTLAND, Ore. — The margin by which an Oregon farming community approved an anti-gay measure worried gay-rights advocates Wednesday and encouraged backers of similar proposals across the state.

"I think it's tragic," said Gail Shibley, an openly gay state representative from Portland. "They have said with this vote that it is OK, perfectly fine, to be fired from your job because someone in your organization thinks you are gay."

By a 956-595 margin, voters in the town of Cornelius approved a measure Tuesday that bars the town government from supporting homosexuality or extending civil rights protections to homosexuals. It was the first vote on the issue by an Oregon community after defeat of a statewide anti-gay measure in last November's election.

Britain holds fate of union treaty

LONDON — With the fate of the European union treaty hanging on a final battle with Parliament, Prime Minister John Major acknowledged Wednesday there is widespread concern about losing national sovereignty.

He insisted, "It simply will not happen, the British won't have it." It is not at all certain the British will have the treaty — which requires the ratification of all 12 European Community nations.

Major expects to win a vote in the House of Commons on Thursday, moving the ratification bill on to the House of Lords. There, the opposition will be led by Major's formidable predecessor, Margaret Thatcher. Appealing to the anti-union rebels in his Conservative Party, Major pledged Wednesday that the treaty wouldn't turn the European Community into a "centralist, federalist superstate."

"I do not want to see powers go to the center," he said in a BBC radio interview. "But if I am to have a real chance to change that, I cannot do it by standing on the sidelines of Europe throwing stones at all my partners."

Judiciary Committee hopeful quits club

WASHINGTON — Webster Hubbell told senators weighing his confirmation Wednesday that he had resigned from a nearly all-white country club so his work as the Justice Department's No. 3 official wouldn't be clouded by perceptions of a lack of sensitivity.

The issue, involving the Country Club of Little Rock, Ark., gave Judiciary Committee Republicans a chance to accuse the Democrats of a double standard in considering nominees.

The Judiciary Committee passed a resolution in 1990 that it was inappropriate for nominees coming before the panel to be members of clubs that discriminate unless they have been actively engaged in stopping the practice.

Hubbell, who resigned from the club Tuesday, told the panel that for years he had worked within the club and with the blacks in the Little Rock community to bring about diversity in the club.

Several committee members — including Carol Moseley-Braun, the Senate's only black member — praised Hubbell's decision to quit the club. Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said, "I wish you had opted to remain in the club, because I think you were a force for change and would have been productive."

White House fires travel office staff

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House abruptly fired the entire staff of its travel office Wednesday, accusing them of shoddy accounting practices, mismanagement and possible overbilling. A distant cousin of President Clinton was named to oversee travel arrangements.

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said the FBI probably would be called in to investigate, "given the kind of information and the amounts of money involved."

Seven employees were fired, told to clear out by the end of the day. They were dismissed with two weeks' severance pay after working at the White House between 10 to 30 years. Two of the seven were not given a chance to tell their side of the story, officials said.

Clinton deflected questions about the firings, saying merely he was told that an investigation had turned up "serious problems" and that "there was no alternative."

Pollution plan gets public input

By ERNEST GEIGENMILLER
Senior Reporter

Proposals to improve Utah County's air were on the table for public discussion at a Provo hearing on Wednesday.

Engineers from Utah's Division of Air Quality openly discussed the 13 proposals with local residents, industrial lobbyists and health department representatives.

Officials explored the proposals with the public in an attempt to draft a contingency plan to satisfy federal regulations. The Environmental Protection Agency cannot approve existing state air regulations without the contingency plan, which is expected to be finalized in November.

State Environmental Engineer Bill Reis said air quality data will be collected and submitted to the EPA. If Utah County meets the federal requirements, the State Implementation Plan will receive annual extensions until 1996. By that time, Reis said the state will prove its ability to manage its pollution problems. If Utah County is unable to prove its abilities, the EPA will order tighter restrictions.

The EPA has become involved as a result of an excessive carbon-monoxide level infraction that occurred 3 1/2 years ago in Provo.

Shelley Teuscher, a lobbyist for the Utah Petroleum Association, said 90 percent of high carbon-monoxide levels come from motor vehicles.

The proposals include lowering woodburning thresholds, revising parking lot sizes, modifying pre-1980 vehicles and improving the public transportation system.

Bill Rhoads represented BYU at the hearing. Rhoads said he was in attendance to help BYU fulfill air-control standards.

The travel office books flights and accommodations for White House employees traveling commercially, and also charters jets for the press corps that accompanies the president on every trip. Over a 17-month period examined by auditors, it handled about $11 million in a press cash account.

'Phantom' in Los Angeles

4-year source of road trip fun

By LAURIE FISCHER
Universe Staff Writer

The Phantom of the Opera" performances in Los Angeles have been deemed worthy of road trips by many BYU students.

The Phantom of the Opera" opened at the Music Center of Los Angeles County on May 31, 1989, and will close its more than four-year run on August 29.

Erika Lundgren, 23, a senior majoring in secondary education from Scottsdale, Ariz., saw the "phantom" performance with a group of friends in April. Although Lundgren had heard the music before and was aware of the plot, it was her first time seeing the performance.

"It was really spectacular," Lundgren said. "The whole thing was a neat experience -- the story, music and special effects."

Crystal Cannon, 19, a junior majoring in psychology from Fresno, Calif., traveled to Los Angeles with her friends in February for the sole purpose of seeing "Phantom."

"It was definitely worth the trip," Cannon said.

Student tickets are available for "The Phantom of the Opera." Student rush begins one hour before the performance. At this time, students are allowed to purchase tickets at the $15 price, upon presenting high school or college identification. Student tickets will be available until June 13.

Fresh air performance

By KIMBERLY BARTLETT
Universe Staff Writer

Minds may be closed, but the air is guaranteed to be open at this performance.

"Inherit the Wind" will be performed on the Harris Fine Arts Center northwest patio today through Saturday at 8 p.m.

Under the direction of Corey Ewan, 33, a doctoral candidate in theater from Glendora, Calif., the play enacts a small-town trial held at a school teacher accused of teaching evolution in the 1920s.

The play is really about a person's right to be wrong," Ewan said. "It shows the right everyone has to think their own way because they are human beings with agency."

"Personally, I don't believe in evolution," said Heywood Bagley, 26, a theater major from Torrance, Calif. "But I can play a man who vehemently argues for evolution on stage because I believe in the need for different perspectives."

"No point of view is proved or strengthened without considering the opposing beliefs," said Jason Tatom, 22, a theater major from Pleasant Grove.

The play is being performed outdoors because "the script calls for a situation in which the town is visible throughout the entire play," Ewan said.

Performances are free.

Sting plays cold at ParkWest

By KIMBERLY BARTLETT
Universe Staff Writer

An expansive star-lit sky, cool canyon breeze and high-tech stage setup were the elements combined to create an evening of rock under the stars when Sting opened the 1993 summer concert series at ParkWest Tuesday.

Opening with his recent hit single "If I Ever Lose My Faith in You," Sting's performance highlighted music from his entire career.

Audience members participated in the canyon performance by singing along during "Heavy Cloud No Rain," a release from the new album, and "Roxanne," a classic favorite of fans from Sting's days with his band The Police.

Before singing "It's Probably Me," a song he wrote for the movie "Lethal Weapon 3," Sting used a touch of humor to explain how the song came to be.

"They asked me to write a buddy song," Sting said. "You know, a song that conceivably Mel Gibson could sing to Danny Glover, or Danny Glover to Mel Gibson for that matter."

With their lyrical ballad style, "Shape of My Heart" and "Fields of Gold," Sting had audience members swaying in time as if entranced with the poetic qualities of both words and music.

Leaving the stage, Sting commented on the canyon winds that blew throughout the evening saying, "I'm cold, but I've had a great time."

Looking up

By DAYNA ORR
Universe Staff Writer

The Salt Lake Astronomical Society, in conjunction with Hansen Planetarium, will provide a view of the wonders of the universe at a free series of star parties this summer.

Mark Palmer, science demonstration specialist for Hansen Planetarium, said the public can observe various objects of interest.

Planets, star clusters, nebulae and other objects can be viewed through telescopes, while professionals are on hand to answer questions or even find a guest's favorite constellation for viewing. Palmer said even objects as common as the moon are "spectacular to view when seen close up."

Kimball Hansen, BYU professor of Astronomy, said there are many constellations visible in the night sky this time of year. However, "it depends on the telescope and the capabilities of the people working them," Hansen said.

Location of parties alternates between four sites: The Stansbury Observatory, Little Mountain, the Harmon's Family Center and Liberty Park. All evening star parties begin at dusk.

DR. BRUCE D. PORTER

Bradley Senior Research Associate, Olin Institute

"Russia After Communism: Troubled Present, Uncertain Future"

In August 1991 a failed coup against Mikhail Gorbachev set in motion events that led to the disintegration of the Soviet Union and the collapse of Communist rule in Russia. Smaller in size but freer in spirit than its Soviet predecessor, this new Russia is saddled with obsolete institutions and operating almost on "auto pilot" as it seeks to forge a new path. Its constitutional structure is an anachronism. The central government is weak and poorly organized, and regional, ethnic, and ideological fissures threaten national unity. Crime and chaos are spreading; inflation is rampant. The Russian public is apathetic about politics and preoccupied with the daily struggle for existence.

In this confusion, three main factions vie for power: (1) liberal internationalists who, like Yeltsin, look to the West and want Russia to become a capitalist democracy; (2) conservative nationalists, who dominate the Supreme Soviet and prefer Russia to pursue a path independent of the West; and (3) extreme nationalists and former Communists, presently a small minority but apt to grow in influence if the economic situation worsens.

Dr. Porter will discuss Russia's future—how it will be influenced by its past, by the growing role of private enterprise, and, above all, by the changing attitudes of the Russian people. He will conclude with the idea that Russia's struggle for democracy is a struggle for the peace and stability of the entire world.

Bruce Porter is pursuing independent research and writing on the impact of war on the origins and internal development of European states, and on Soviet foreign and defense policy. Most recently executive director of the Board for International Broadcasting, he oversaw operations for Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty, Inc., in Munich, Germany. He has written extensively, with War and the Rise of the State forthcoming. Dr. Porter earned his BA at BYU and his MA and PhD at Harvard.

A question and answer session will follow in the Varsity Theatre from 12:00 noon to 1:00 p.m.

Agriculture seminar benefiting Mexico

LAURA VERNON
Universe Staff Writer

farm animals, crop planting and curriculum development have been topics of discussion for seven university educators from Mexico at a training seminar sponsored by Ezra Taft Benson Agriculture and Food Institute.

Some Mexican educators came to discuss topics related to research, administration and curriculum development at BYU, said Luis V. Espinoza, Benson Institute coordinator.

"The training is a product of an agreement signed between the Benson Institute, College of Biology and Agriculture and the general director of agriculture and technology education in Mexico," he said.

"That means we work jointly in the implementation of appropriate technological subjects to be introduced into the Mexican curriculum," Espinoza said.

Espinoza also said BYU benefits from the training seminar by sharing the expertise found here with other areas of the world where the need is great.

For Mexico, he said, the education system will be benefited by exposing its faculty and administration to new techniques and methodology so they can be taught to Mexican students. Then, the students will implement these programs in the rural areas of Mexico.

"At other institutions, their programs are geared toward helping the large landholders in Mexico whereas our programs are geared toward helping the small peasant farmer provide food for his family," said Richard Kellems, associate professor of animal science.

Richard Terry, chair of the Department of Agronomy and Horticulture, said the seminar was a great start in communicating common interests.

Big carrying explosive gas overturns

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A semi-trailer rig hauling 5,000 gallons of highly flammable liquid hydrogen overturned on a west Salt Lake freeway exchange Wednesday afternoon.

The rollover prompted the evacuation of businesses and more than 100 people nearby, including 80 children in a day care center several hundred feet from the tanker. A firefighter received minor injuries, according to the Salt Lake Fire Department. The 62-year-old truck driver and a motorist he apparently collided with were both treated at area hospitals.

The 80 children were taken to the studios of television station KSLX.

SHED NO TEARS
WITH OUR SIMPLE
CUSTOMER POLICY.
"NO BUYER'S REMORSE."

After work, each of us at Wilsons becomes somebody else's customer — just like you. And occasionally, we've known the frustration of finding out a "great buy" wasn't the bargain some smooth salesman led us to believe it was. That's why we promise that won't happen at Wilsons. From the very beginning, we've been committed to a "No Buyer's Remorse" policy. For you, that policy means no wishy-washy price quotes.

No technical mumbo-jumbo. No rationalized exaggerations. And, no pressuring you into a decision, even if we think it's the right one. Instead, you'll get guaranteed prices — and straight answers. But, getting straight answers first requires knowing the right questions. "No Buyer's Remorse" means we'll even help you learn the right questions. That's why for 19 years the only remorse we've come to expect at Wilsons is from our competitors.

Mountainland's Head Start bus is surrounded by police officers after it overturned, hitting the median three miles south of the Center Street exit on I-15 South.

Head Start school bus crashes; driver, aide seriously injured

By HEATHER BALL
Universe Staff Writer

The last day of school has always been a time of celebration for children, but for preschoolers at the Orem Mountainland Head Start preschool, the last day of school was nearly disastrous.

At approximately 11 a.m. Wednesday, the bus in which they were about to ride crashed on I-15 South. Two women were seriously injured in the accident when they were thrown from the bus while traveling to pick up the children.

Bus driver Paula Larson of Provo and bus aide Shirlene Willson of Orem were heading south in the right lane on I-15 when Larson lost control of the bus. About three miles north of the Provo Center Street exit, the bus veered to the right, at which time Larson overcorrected, sending the bus across all three lanes and into the median.

"The bus rolled through the median at least once and maybe twice," said Utah Highway Patrol trooper Todd Johnson. The bus came to rest right-side-up and facing north on the inside shoulder of North I-15.

"Both passengers were ejected from the bus," Johnson said. The victims were transported to Utah Valley Regional Medical Center, one in critical condition and the other in serious condition.

"They both have multiple lacerations and bruises," said Rudy Anderson, director of the Head Start program. "The hospital said they're in fair to critical condition, but no official status has been given because they're waiting for X-rays."

"This is the first accident we've had in eight years," Anderson said. "I'm just glad there were no children on the bus."

Sherry Moore, an employee of Head Start and mother of one of the children who regularly rides Larson's bus, expressed similar feelings of relief. "It could have been a lot worse," Moore said.

Joni Rowley, mother of one of the children, said she thought there was a mechanical problem. "We've had to switch buses a lot this year because of different things going wrong with them," Rowley said.

Mike Lees, the Utah Highway patrolman conducting the safety inspection, said the bus is being checked for mechanical malfunction.

Dinosaur bones may get new home

By TRACY HELMER

The dinosaur collection of the BYU Earth Science Museum might be getting a new home if the city approves a resolution to buy the Brigham Young Academy.

The Provo City Council, under the direction of Mayor Hill, passed a resolution March 29 that appropriates $200,000 to conduct a feasibility study of the uses of and possible acquisition of the Academy.

The curator of BYU's Earth Science Museum, Ken Stockman, said if the city does purchase the Academy, chances are good the Academy will be used as a museum and that the city will invite BYU to house its dinosaur collection there.

BYU's Jurassic-period dinosaur collection is among the top five collections in the nation and compares with the Smithsonian's collection, Stockman said.

The Earth Science Museum is committed to placing its multi-million-dollar collection in the Academy if the city approves funding, said Janita Anderson, director of program development at the Earth Science Museum.

BYU can display only 5 percent of its dinosaur collection because of the size of the Earth Science Museum building. BYU is storing more than 120 tons of fossils and dinosaur bones in plaster jackets beneath the stadium until a place can be found to show them, Anderson said.

The Earth Science Museum has already made plans for the new museum, including several fully mounted dinosaur skeletons, dinosaur robotics and a children's discovery room. Also, galleries featuring other earth-science related subjects are planned.

Although BYU owns the dinosaur collection, funding for the Academy project will not come from BYU. According to Brent Harker, associate director of public communications, BYU will not contribute money to the museum because the museum is not part of the school's primary mission of education. Harker said all museums at BYU, including the art museum, were built using donated funds.

Harker stressed BYU's support of the new museum and said it will make existing Earth Science Museum grants and staff available.

Although the mayor and the city council want to control the property, they are not committed to buying it until the feasibility study has been completed, said Tom Martin, Provo City's executive administrator. He said the city wants to find out whether the structure is salvageable and for what use the building is most appropriate.

If the city does decide to buy the building, Mayor Hill wants the county to allocate $125,000 of Provo's sales-tax revenue to purchase the Academy over the next eight years.

BYU's dinosaur bone and fossil collection now stored under the east stands of Cougar Stadium may be able to shake off the cobwebs soon. If Provo City acquires the Brigham Young Academy, the Earth Science Museum hopes to use the building to display its renowned Jurassic collection.

Orem receives grant to preserve history

By AMY DAVIES
Universe Staff Writer

Historic sites may be receiving recognition in Orem because of a grant given to the city's Historic Preservation Advisory Commission from the state organization.

"The goal of the commission is to preserve the history of Orem in a written and structural form, to leave a history for the people," said Jim Wilbur, a member of the commission.

The commission will acquire a $2,500 grant administered by the Division of State History. The grant will be used to survey the community.

The survey will be performed by professionals hired by the commission to determine 200 potential buildings for nomination to the National Register of historic sites. To qualify as historic, buildings must be at least 50 years old.

A more intensive survey will be performed in which era and timing will be used to judge the sites. The 200 buildings will then be narrowed down to 10.

We want your diamond to have the absence of color, or to be the closest to colorless as possible.
